Muhammad Ali story: Thrilla in Manila

'Float like a butterfly, sting like a bee'

"Try our knockout cocktails"

Muhammad Ali, who alternately calls himself the "best" and the "greatest," proved yesterday that he is both when he scored a technical knockout over challenger Joe Frazier in the 14th round of a bloody, vicious fight to retain the world heavyweight championship. After the bruising contest, Ali strongly hinted at retiring: "I'm tired. My body is aching all over. I want to rest. You could have been witness to my last fight," Ali told a press conference following his electrifying victory. There actually was confusion over what round the fight ended since the challenger quit at the end of the 14th. The games and amusements board, however, said that the bell had not rung for the 15th round and under World Boxing association rules, it was a 14th round TKO. Ali's abbreviated victory, fashioned before a crowd of 25,000 at the Philippine coliseum which included the First Couple and their daughter Imee, settled once and for all the question of who was the better man. There was no knockdown but the champion had Frazier in the 13th and 14th rounds. The fight, which was beamed in 70 countries around the world via satellite, was the third fight between the two. Frazier won the first on March 8, 1971, and Ali evened the score on Jan. 28, 1974.

Wilma Hailed as Top Star of Olympics

ROME, Italy - There is no question today around whose shoulders the purple toga of greatest athlete of track in these Olympics should be draped.

It's a girl, slim, shy but spectacularly explosive Wilma Rudolph of the hills of Tennessee, who ran the anchor leg of the winning women's 400-meter relay team Thursday afternoon and who earlier won both the 100-meter dash and 200-meter dash.

She not only won the 200, she broke the Olympic record of 23.2 by two-tenths of a second.

And she not only ran the anchor leg of the record breaking women's relay team Thursday, she made a joke of her part of the race. Given a lead of a yard she stretched this to a good three or four by the time she broke the tape.

THE BEATLES HERE!

FIVE thousand screaming, chanting teenagers - most of them playing truant from school - gave the Beatles a fantasy welcome here today.

More than 100 extra police were on duty to control the crowd as the group's jet landed at the John F. Kennedy Airport.

Pandemonium broke out among the stamping, banner-waving fans as the Beatles - John Lennon, Paul McCartney, George Harrison and Ringo Starr stepped from the plane.

One policeman who has worked at the airport for ten years said: "I think the world has gone mad." And a veteran airport employee said: "I see it - but I don't believe it."

As the Beatles waved and clowned, teenagers at the front of the crowd on the airport roof struggled to keep from falling to the tarmac, 20ft. below.

Celebrate Elvis' wedding with choice of champagne and wine from our menu superstar Elvis Presley married his bride, Priscilla Ann Beaulieu, in an intimate Las Vegas ceremony.

The couple exchanged vows at the Aladdin hotel in Las Vegas, attended by only a handful of guests. Afterward, friends, family, and business associates from MGM, RCA, and the William Morris Agency gathered for an over-the-top breakfast reception. It was an unconventional wedding for an unconventional couple.
